DULLES PREDICTION:'Anti-Red Revolts
Can't Be Successful'

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18. — (U.P.I.) — Allen W. Dulles, former Central Intelligence Agency director, predicts that no country under Communism will revolt against that rule successfully.

Dulles, in an article made public yesterday, said the C. I. A. never expected a popular uprising in Cuba in 1961 when the Bay of Pigs invasion was planned. History argued against such help there as it does against revolt in the Iron Curtain countries, he said.

Those familiar with French and Italian underground movements in the Second World War and with the 1956 Hungarian revolution, would realize, Dulles said, that "spontaneous revolutions by unarmed people in this modern age are ineffective and often disastrous."

The retired C. I. A. chief, is the author of a book-length article, "The Craft of Intelligence," in the 1963 edition of the Britannica Book of the Year, published by Encyclopedia Britannica, Inc. Part of the article will appear in the April issue of Harper's Magazine.

Dulles says he opposed any additional congressional inspection of the intelligence-gathering agency. Present procedures have worked well for almost ten years, he said.

Both Russia and the United States err in their intelligence estimates of each other, Dulles said. He cited Cuba as an example.

"In Cuba, in October of 1962," he said, "Khrushchev presumably 'estimated' that he could sneak his missiles into the island, and face the United States with a fait accompli," when he chose.
